A coup on Terra 2 leaves the heir to the throne, a strong-willed 15-year-old girl, running for her life. After her ship crashes, she finds herself lost in the middle of a forest, along with the daughter of the palace cook and a somewhat awkward young peasant. On the run from rebel troops, the fugitives can count on no one but themselves... and on Bakou, a genetically modified orangutan who has been transformed into one of the most powerful weapons ever made. Laurent Verron and Cric, the new authors of Boule et Bill, throw themselves wholeheartedly into this thrilling adventure, which will completely revolutionize the all-ages bande dessinée.

The classic framework of this tale is really an excuse to create a marvelous, nuanced portrait of three adolescents — two girls and a boy — who, lost and alone, must now learn to live together. But 'Fugitives' central character is really Bakou, the genetically-altered orangutan: simultaneously a protective nanny, a terrifying weapon, and a companion in misadventure.

A truly accomplished work.
