Célestin and Leila. Two teenagers. The first flees his native village in the heart of Africa to gain a Europe that he imagines to be marked with dreams and magic. The second, without even a shadow of regret, leaves this Europe where she was born, and takes a flight to Morocco, the country of her grandparents. The place where they come together, as improbable as it is, is a shabby old bar lost in the desert, with a few scattered fuel barrels and a storytelling Frenchman...
