Victor Lalouz is a young man, just like any other young man today. He works at a FM radio station, where he takes listeners' calls and talks about truly important topics, such as the male obsession with big breasts and the tragedy of having ears that stick out too far.

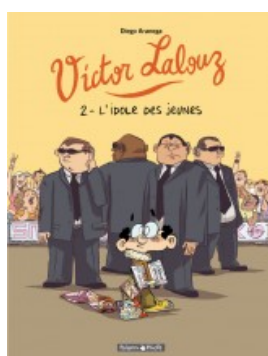

He sees his psychiatrist four times a week to reconnect with his inner self, and he never gives up trying to hit on the lovely Nina — who scorns him because of his looks.

In short, Victor is the king of “staying chill”; a sort of neurotic Gaston Lagaffe, but one who never doubts his own vast potential.
