A Viking warrior and a young slave battle a ferocious sea creature that haunts the fjords of ancient Scandinavia.

It is the year 800, and Drakkars (longships) and fishing boats have been vanishing all over Scandinavia, leaving no trace. A young slave girl, Sieglind, miraculously escapes the wreck of her ship. She is taken in by a strange man: Asgard, known as "Iron-foot". Asgard is a "Krökentötter," an ancient Viking warrior turned bounty hunter, who pursues the most extraordinary - and dangerous - game.

Asgard has led a tough, battle-ridden life, eventually turning to the profession of "monster hunting." The news of such a creature in the territories of Noordland seems to offer him an opportunity to win enormous rewards, and, perhaps, to re-establish his place at the court of Jarl, the King of the Vikings. Asgard and Sieglind embark on a drakkar with one simple objective: find and kill the creature that's haunting the fjords.

Despite

all his experience and preparations, Asgard will discover that the menace roaming the frozen waters is a much more formidable enemy than the huge bears or giant reptiles of the distant Southlands.

they set out as hunters, Sieglind and Asgard will end up as prey. The conflict between the Krökentötter and the animal culminates in an epic clash between a man thirsty for vengeance against the Fates... and the son of the Gods.
