'Chère Patagonie' is a saga written in the great South American literary tradition that tells the story of several generations who lived in Patagonia from the 19th to the 21st century. Indians, European colonialists, exiles, rural and urban dwellers, and even a German filmmaker see their relationships change over time, but always under the influence of the immensity of this South American 'Land's End': Patagonia, the southernmost point of the inhabited world.
