1950s New York: After Navit loses her partner and lover, she finds herself at the head of "Gentlewind," a small men's magazine for which she has big plans. But the accomplished businesswoman isn't able to forget a young artist named Arch, as penniless as she was when they shared a studio in Brooklyn. She promises herself that she'll find him, whatever it takes. Juan Diaz Canales and Teresa Valero recount 30 years in the life of a remarkable woman, from her Bohemian youth to her sudden success, and her decades-long search for her first love. A moving and tragic tale beautifully brought to life by the pencil and watercolors of Italian artist Antonio Lapone.

This integral collects volumes one and two.
