The story is set in the present day.

Pierre is a former math student. Forced to abandon his studies in order to care for his father — a professor who has since died — Pierre has thrown himself wholeheartedly into boxing, although he abhors violence. His career as an amateur boxer is going so well that he has begun to harbor hopes of turning professional. But Pierre lives alone, and hides his boxing activities from his friends, just as he used to hide them from his father, for fear of their reactions.

TJ, Pierre's close friend since their college days, works in a bank. He is gifted in his work and popular with women. But he has one vice: gambling. It's a secret he conceals, so as not to frighten his new girlfriend, Anne. A dangerous game — because TJ sometimes bets very large sums of money, with very untrustworthy people... And that's how it happens that, one day, he makes too big a wager...

Anne tells everyone that she's a teacher, even though she and Pierre met in the restaurant where she waitresses in the evenings. But Anne has a far darker secret: her waitressing job is just a cover for her real work as a professional killer. And an organization is about to make her an offer she can't refuse...

How long can these little games continue? Unusually perceptive, this trilogy unfolds in three acts around three characters and their individual perspectives, each one with something big to hide...
