This series puts together a gallery of characters who have only one thing in common - they are all customers of a small music shop, "The Stereo Club", managed by Jacky. They cross paths a little like in the film "High Fidelity". Each album will tell a complete story around one central character. The two young authors make the most of their backgrounds in advertising and the Internet and take an amusing and savage look at our little world. In the first volume, we meet Guy. In his fifties, he's a divorced, grumpy Parisian who owns a newspaper and who is a specialist in jazz music; which he loves — until the day his teenage daughter makes him listen to the hottest popular singer - Britney. And it blows his mind.
