Vera and Mary are witches who have vowed to use magic only to protect their surroundings. These, however, are full of vulnerable young adults who spend their evenings playing video games and alternate between casual jobs. One day, while the two witches are cycling through the forest to recharge their magical powers through contact with nature, they make a terrible discovery: a ghastly building has contaminated their environment. So Vera and Mary engage in a battle against the "concrete temples"..

Majo No Michi is at once a story of witchcraft, an ecological fable, a social chronicle and an ode to bikepacking (adventure cycling), which the author has been practicing for a long time.
