Jack Kenu is Maori, alone since his wife left, and police officer in Auckland, New Zealand. The collapse of the country, ruined by the global financial crisis, doesn't interest him as much as the electoral battle raging between Kirwan, prime minister of the conservative party, and the very controversial Witkaire, a Maori MP, follower of 'The Human Path', a programme based on a radically new economic and social approach. When we discover the body of a young woman on a beach, with a shattered skull, his investigation will lead Kenu directly into the heart of a political battle without limits, which now fascinates the public.
