What if the true story of Robin Hood turned out to be different from the one we know and love?

A forest, a sheriff, an outlaw who robs the rich to give to the poor... we all know how it goes. Disney made him popular, Kevin Costner made him sexy and Russell Crowe made him credible. But do we really know the whole story? What if Robin Hood and the sheriff were one and the same person? What if the sheriff was actually just a normal guy, fed up with the King's ridiculous new laws? What if he had found a way to keep his land in a good financial state simply by stealing from his own soldiers? Would it be worth the risk?
