The Baron, a rich farmer, thinks he has the right to kill whatever he wants on his vast expanse of land. That goes for animals, but also for humans who dare confront him. What is this bitterness that inhabits him and grows daily, that causes him to have fits of anger and insomnia? Is it a disease, a curse or is it the fault of a certain young wild woman who roams his forest, spoils his hunting parties, and destroys his traps? As time goes on the dramas continue to add up and a rather unusual hunt must be organized: a werewolf hunt.
